

ALICE SWOONS WHEN FOURTEEN TEETH ARE PULLED

But a Quart of Brandy and Feet Massage Restore Her to Consciousness.

HAD ONE SET TOO MANY

She is a Leopard at the Zoo
—She Was Born Last Year.

Miss Alice, who is the most graceful young thing in the Central Park Zoo, passed through a severe dental ordeal today when Dr. Bill Snyder pulled fourteen of her teeth. Miss Alice collapsed under the strain and was revived with great difficulty. After absorbing a quart of brandy, however, and being massaged on the soles of her feet she improved rapidly and will come around nicely in a few days. Her mother, Mrs. Kitty Croker, is with her, and her father, Dick Croker, has sent his sympathy to Miss Alice's boudoir from his royal apartments.

Almost a month ago Miss Alice suffered from a slight indisposition. Her appetite seemed to fail her, and she refused to eat her usual tiffin of four pounds of chuck and a T-bone. Even her golden spots lost some of their luster and her purr lost its rhythmic beat. Bob Hurton, her personal attendant, became greatly worried and called in Dr. Bill Snyder. An effort was made to take Miss Alice's pulse, but after losing two coat sleeves and a small portion of a thumb Hurton gave up the attempt. Dr. Snyder prescribed a variation of diet, and Miss Alice was fed on the delicacies of the jungle—plump fowl, juicy rabbits, squirrels and other tempting tid-bits. The graceful young thing perked up immediately and soon lost her wan and peaked air. Indeed, she became so playful that she ate a new keeper's collar and part of his corduroy jacket.

Wouldn't Return to Chuck. Dr. Snyder thought she had sufficiently recovered to return to the more rugged diet of chuck. But when her valet, Hurton, tendered five pounds on a plinthfork yesterday afternoon, the handsome misanthrope turned away in disgust. In fact, she snarled and spit at her attendant and endeavored to claw him. Snyder came in and she snarled more fiercely than ever, and in doing so revealed the source of her physical woes. Miss Alice had two rows of lower teeth. She had failed to shed her puppy teeth, and the permanent ones grinders and molars had come crowding in. Such a trifling matter as leopard dentistry didn't faze Dr. Snyder. Having received many degrees in elephant chiropody, hippopotamus surgery, rhinoceros pathology and buffalo therapeutics, a little thing like leopard dentistry was a mere sack of pecans to Dr. Snyder.

So today he gathered his assistants about him and prepared to extract Miss Alice's puppy teeth. First he got a long pole and tied a sack to the end of it. Then with an armful of forceps he entered the young spotted person's gridded chamber. With a dexterous twist he got the sack over Miss Alice's head and down over her lithe body, then slipped the noose.

Some Trouble to Secure Her. The young lady did not take kindly to the garment. She kicked and bit and scratched and growled until all her friends and relatives in the maison du chat lifted their voices in a doleful chorus. But Dr. Snyder and his men at last secured the violently agitated sack with ropes. Miss Alice's feet were tied and a hole cut in the sack to permit her head to come through.

It took three powerful pairs of hands to grip securely Miss Alice's head and insert a stick between the jaws. She continued to hiss and spit like a thunder while Dr. Snyder drew out the puppy teeth, until suddenly she became limp and lifeless.

"I guess she's gone," said Hurton to Snyder. "She don't seem to breathe."

The man behind the forceps pulled another tooth for luck and then let the young lady gently down. She lay very still, apparently lifeless. The sack was stripped off and the bond cut from her feet. Snyder put his ear to her heart and could hear no beat.

Brandy Brought Her Around.

"Pretty bad," he said, and went to work to massage the soles of her feet. Brandy and Jimmy Doyle for a pint of water. After a few callons of drip had been dashed in Miss Alice's face there was a movement of life; her pulse returned and her eyes blinked twice. Dr. Snyder poured the pint of brandy down her throat and she came to with a sigh.

There was no spitting or hissing or snarling this time. Miss Alice turned her big brown eyes tenderly on Dr. Snyder and licked his hand. He gave her another pill or two of brandy and she began to purr. She had completely recovered from the shock and the operation was a great success. Only two more teeth remain to be pulled and they will be taken out next week.

Before leaving the case Dr. Snyder permitted his patient's mother to enter her cage and console her.

Miss Alice is one of a pair of twins born last winter in Central Park. Her mother is called Nick and she is the only twin leopard ever raised in captivity. She is almost full grown and is a very beautiful and graceful cat. She has a rare white patch on her forehead, ever since Nick became a lion.
